The Pattern Of The Chinese Past

The Pattern of the Chinese Past Mark Elvin,1973 A satisfactory comprehensive history of the social and economic development of pre modern China the largest country in the world in terms of population and with a documentary record covering three millennia is still far from possible The present work is only an attempt to disengage the major themes that seem to be of relevance to our understanding of China today In particular this volume studies three questions Why did the Chinese Empire stay together when the Roman Empire and every other empire of antiquity of the middle ages ultimately collapsed What were the causes of the medieval revolution which made the Chinese economy after about 1100 the most advanced in the world And why did China after about 1350 fail to maintain her earlier pace of technological advance while still in many respects advancing economically The three sections of the book deal with these problems in turn but the division of a subject matter is to some extent only one of convenience These topics are so interrelated that in the last analysis none of them can be considered in isolation from the others

Outlines of Chinese History Ung Bing Li,1914 The present book was written for two classes of Chinese To those who are studying English it is not so much an attempt to teach Chinese history by English as English through the medium of Chinese history Certainly it will prove doubly interesting to read the facts of the history of one s own country in a foreign tongue which he is making an effort to learn To those to whom Chinese history must otherwise remain unknown it is hoped that the Outlines may induce them to seek further knowledge from the original sources The recent events which are introducing a new epoch in China make a study of our ancient institutions doubly necessary Preface

Mirroring the Past On-cho Ng, Q. Edward Wang, 2005-08-31 China is known for its deep veneration of history. Far more than a record of the past, history to the Chinese is the magister vitae, teacher of life, the storehouse of moral lessons and bureaucratic precedents. Mirroring the Past presents a comprehensive history of traditional Chinese historiography from antiquity to the mid-Qing period. Organized chronologically, the book traces the development of historical thinking and writing in Imperial China, beginning with the earliest forms of historical consciousness and ending with adumbrations of the fundamentally different views engendered by mid-nineteenth-century encounters with the West. The historiography of each era is explored on two levels: first, the gathering of material and the writing and production of narratives to describe past events; second, the thinking and reflecting on meanings and patterns of the past. Significantly, the book embeds within this chronological structure integrated views of Chinese historiography, bringing to light the purposive, didactic, and normative uses of the past. Examining both the worlds of official and unofficial historiography, the authors lay bare the ingenious ways in which Chinese scholars extracted truth from events and reveal how schemas and philosophies of history were constructed and espoused. They highlight the dynamic nature of Chinese historiography, revealing that historical works mapped the contours of Chinese civilization not for the sake of understanding history as disembodied and theoretical learning but for the pragmatic purpose of guiding the world by mirroring the past in all its splendor and squalor.

The Readability of the Past in Early Chinese Historiography Wai-yee Li, 2020-03-17 The past becomes readable when we can tell stories and make arguments about it. When we can tell more than one story or make divergent arguments the readability of the past then becomes an issue. Therein lies the beginning of history, the sense of inquiry that heightens our awareness of interpretation. How do interpretive structures develop and disintegrate? What are the possibilities and limits of historical knowledge? This book explores these issues through a study of the Zuo zhuan, a foundational text in the Chinese tradition whose rhetorical and analytical self-consciousness reveals much about the contending ways of thought unfolding during the period of the text's formation ca. 4th c. B.C.E. But in what sense is this vast collection of narratives and speeches covering the period from 722 to 468 B.C.E. historical? If one can speak of an emergent sense of history in this text, Wai-yee Li argues it lies precisely at the intersection of varying conceptions of interpretation and rhetoric brought to bear on the past within a larger context of competing solutions to the instability and disintegration represented through the events of the 255 years covered by the Zuo zhuan. Even as its accounts of proliferating disorder and disintegration challenge the boundaries of readability, the deliberations on the rules of reading in the Zuo zhuan probe the dimensions of historical self-consciousness.

A Patterned Past David Schaberg, 2020-03-23 In this comprehensive study of the rhetoric, narrative patterns and intellectual content of the Zuo zhuan and Guoyu, David Schaberg reads these two collections of historical anecdotes as traces of a historiographical practice that flourished around the fourth century BCE among the followers of Confucius. He contends that the coherent view of early China found in these texts is an effect of their origins and the habits of reading they impose. Rather than being totally accurate accounts, they represent the efforts of a group of officials and ministers to argue for a moralizing interpretation of the events of early Chinese history and for their own value as skilled interpreters of events and advisers to the rulers of the day.
